Designing a unified digital + visual system that helps a nonprofit team operate at statewide impact.

RAISE Texas is a statewide financial health coalition serving low- to moderate-income Texans with a core team of 3. We rebuilt a fragmented, vendor-locked digital presence into a sustainable, measurable system that improves accessibility, trust, engagement, and conversion across web + email + campaigns.

What changed:

Why it matters:

Reduced operational friction, increased reach, and made outcomes measurable.

95% ROI

Admin maintenance time reduced from 2 days to 1 hour, freeing teams for higher-value work.

Platform Sustainability

~~No~~

~~Vendor~~

No Vendor Lock-in removed dependency on external developers or vendors for routine configuration and reporting changes.

Audience & Jobs-to-be-Done

Support Receivers

Find the right resources fast; subscribe for updates

Partners/Donors

Validate credibility and impact; join/attend/donate

Admins (team of 3)

Publish/update without developers; measure engagement
+ generate reports quickly

The Challenge

Fragmentation was silently reducing impact. The legacy platform drained time, budget, and capacity through vendor lock-in, manual reporting cleanup, and limited measurement—while the experience lacked clear action paths to scale reach.

Before, the experience missed ADA/WCAG-aligned patterns (headings, focus states, form errors), translation readiness (content structure + scalable templates), and search/discoverability for resources and programs—making trust harder to build and outcomes harder to measure.

Strategy

This wasn't "a website redesign." It was an operating model decision:

How might we build a zero-code, scalable digital + visual system that a 3-person team can own—while improving accessibility, trust, and measurable outcomes—without vendor or developer dependency?

We chose a lean, modular stack to prioritize ownership, speed, and sustainability:

- Wix for engagement, content, campaigns, and conversion pages
- HubSpot for CRM, segmentation, workflows, dashboards, and reporting
- Automation to remove manual handoffs and enable lifecycle measurement

Process

DISCOVER

Identify the hidden tax on impact

Mapped where time/money/capacity were being lost: vendor lock-in, manual reporting cleanup, missing measurement, and broken accessibility fundamentals.

DEFINE

Align on users, jobs, and success metrics

Defined the 3 primary groups (Support Receivers, Partners/Donors, Admins) and success criteria: lower overhead, measurable engagement, and a system a 3-person team can own.

IDEATE

Choose a sustainable operating model

Selected a lean stack to prioritize autonomy: Wix for frontstage engagement + accessibility, HubSpot for CRM/reporting, plus automation to remove manual handoffs.

System Design

Solution – Zero-Code Ops as a Business Strategy

System Design (data flow)

Wix pages + forms → Automation sync/tag/dedupe → HubSpot contact records + lifecycle → lists/workflows → dashboards & reporting

Accessibility as a core requirement

We implemented ADA/WCAG-aligned patterns (semantic headings, visible focus states, clear form errors), ensured translation readiness (content structure + scalable templates), and improved search and discoverability for resources and programs.

Final Reflection

Design is not decoration—it is infrastructure.

When creative systems are built with emotional resonance and operational clarity, they compound over time. This work shows how UX + visual design, treated as one system, can materially improve lives at scale — especially when small teams are equipped to own and evolve their tools.
