Documentary filmmaker Alice Aedy launches Visionaries, a new podcast and creative community spotlighting the storytellers using their craft to shape how we see the world.

In an age where attention is fleeting and the world can feel confusing, documentary filmmaker Alice Aedy is creating a space for stories that make us look up. Her new podcast and community, Visionaries, launches this October as a series spotlighting the storytellers who are redefining our perception of change.

Hosted by Alice, Visionaries isn't just another interview show. It's a creative ecosystem for filmmakers, photographers, and activists to use their voice as a force for impact. By creating a space for like-minded changemakers to share ideas, the project moves beyond its concept and into tangible spaces that can see real change.

In its debut episode, it delves into a deeply personal conversation with Lynsey Addario, the Pulitzer Prize-winning photojournalist whose fearless documentation of conflict and human rights crises has spanned more than two decades. Alice, who began her career as Addario's assistant, revisits moments of danger, sacrifice and purpose: from kidnappings and near-death experiences to the emotional toll of bearing witness to war.

"Visionaries is the space I have always wished for myself," says Alice. "With the world in turmoil and our industry shifting around us, it feels more vital now than ever: a space for storytellers who want to use their voice to make a difference."
